Not illustrated. 1844 edition. Excerpt: ...the appointment of Doctor Baird. avowed in his gratitude to Lord St. Vincent, while many forgot his benefits. That to Dr. Bairds consummate skill and judgment are to be attributed the detection and correction of most of the naval medical abuses of his day, is as indisputable, as it is notorious to every man who knew him, that he invariably, to the last, gave the credit of all his own success to Lord St. Vincent. Such, in general terms, were the charges brought by the Right Honourable accuser; and the intention has been, to state them as fairly and as forcibly for him, and against Lord St. Vincent, as possible. The replies shall be in the relative order. The first is the question, purposely delayed until now, of the wisdom in Lord St. Vincents defence of the coast. His Lordship would not, as his political opponent insisted he ought, meet the hostile flotilla of gun-boats by gun-boats. He thought that ships-of-the-line and frigates were infinitely superior. Besides, he could have manned gun-boats only by exhausting the ships on the Home Service of their crews, and thus leaving the fleets of the enemy at Brest, Rochfort, Ferrol and the Texel to range unopposed wherever they thought proper. But, as to the gun-boat system itself. Whatever were Mr. Pitts excellences as a Parliamentary orator, it seems that it is only a caricature almost too extravagant for satire, which would contrast his opinion with Lord St. Vincents, viz. that of perhaps the very finest seaman the Country ever produced, upon a question peculiarly within his Lordships professional knowledge and experience, and never even comprehensible by a Treasury Minister. Of embarkations and disembarkations; of the fitness or unfitness of a rowing flotilla to navigate the Channel; of...
